McLean, VA – July 15, 2005 – Women in Technology (WIT), a Washington, D.C.-based non-for-profit organization, has selected Mary Ann Wagner to serve on its Board of Directors for a second consecutive term. WIT's mission is to provide women in the technology community a networking and professional growth environment to develop relationships and create new opportunities. Ms. Wagner will facilitate this mission as head of Member Development on the Board of Directors for the 2005-2006 service year. Last year, she successfully steered the Mentor-Protégé Program, a program that pairs thirty senior professional women with women seeking career guidance to foster quality discussion and mutual growth. This year, Ms. Wagner will continue her contributions to the organization and its mission by reaching out to potential members and promoting visibility of the group and its aims. She is the President and founder of XIO Strategies, Inc., a consulting firm based in McLean, VA and has authored articles on woman entrepreneurship and the rising role of women in technology. She also appears as a featured speaker on topics of logistics and supply chain management. Her company offers consulting services in supply chain management, change management, and technology implementation.
